WHY VOTE?
Throughout U.S. history, Americans have fought—and Americans have died—for the right to vote. Voting honors that history and is an important way to have an influence on the community, the state and the country. Voting strengthens the voices of individuals within the government and may influence policies that affect their lives. However, not everyone who is eligible to vote does so. In fact, according to the Pew Research Center, 4 out of 10 Americans did not vote who were eligible for voting in the 2016 presidential election.

Historically, individuals diagnosed with mental illnesses have faced barriers to voting. To date, most states have laws that, in some form or another, limit the rights of citizens with mental illnesses to vote. However, studies have shown that no evidence exists that people diagnosed with serious mental illnesses are any less able to make informed political choices than other Americans, and that this applies even to people who are hospitalized or under guardianships.

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS
Many laws have been enacted that support the rights of citizens diagnosed with mental illnesses to vote. These include the Americans with Disabilities Act, the National Voter Registration Act, the Voting Rights Act and the Help America Vote Act. Listed below are some of the rights every citizen preparing to vote should know:

- Citizens can register to vote almost any time. Since the National Voter Registration Act was passed in 1993, most state agencies and state-funded programs providing disability services are now required to offer year-round voter registration.

- All citizens are allowed to cast a ballot. Therefore, even if an individual with a mental illness is denied the right to vote, he or she must be allowed to submit a Provisional Ballot. An election worker will later decide if the individual is eligible to vote. If the individual is deemed eligible, then the Provisional Ballot will be counted.
• Individuals who have been hospitalized, either voluntarily or involuntarily, still have the right to vote. In order to do so they must register and, prior to the election, request and complete an absentee ballot.

HOW TO FIND OR GIVE SUPPORT

Getting people interested in politics—that is, the civic life of their community, their state and their country—is the first step. Various websites and radio stations such as National Public Radio will often have information about a candidate’s background and agenda. If you need help voting, assistance can be provided by friends, family members, a poll worker or any other trusted individual you choose.

MAKE A VOTING PLAN

Voting processes for the 2020 election are unique due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Because of this, many US citizens are voting by mail. Whether you are voting in person or by mail, you can use this worksheet to make a plan that ensures your vote will be counted. Take advantage of the resources listed on the last page of this document to find out if you are registered to vote and find your polling place.
